The Texas Chapter of the American Public Works Association (TPWA) has selected the Fort Bend County Public Transportation Facility project for its 2020 Project of the Year Award.

The $21 million facility, which opened in January 2020, serves as a one-stop shop for Fort Bend County's transportation department, including its administrative, operations, maintenance, fuel depot and bus washing functions.

The new facility allows the County to combine its transportation functions into a single location for improved efficiency and service.

The facility is also a key component of the County's long-range transit plan and is designed for future expansions that will accommodate a 100 percent increase to bus staging capacity.

"A tremendous amount of time, energy and good old-fashioned sweat went into creating this wonderful facility to give us the space and flexibility we needed to grow our program. Our project management team showed great dedication and skill in meeting the challenges that we met along the way. We greatly appreciate this special recognition of our facility and our team." said Perri D'Armond, director of Fort Bend Transit.

Engineering firm Lockwood, Andrews & Newnam, Inc. (LAN) provided planning, engineering and design services for the new transportation facility while SpawGlass served as the contractor. Other firms involved in the project included RdIR Architects as the architect, Huitt Zollars as construction manager, Asakura Robinson as the landscape architect, and HDR | Maintenance Design Group for specialty equipment and systems. The Federal Transit Administration and Fort Bend County provided the funding for the project.
